As a “place to explore, learn, and engage,” the Institute (OLLI) at Duke University has been serving retired faculty and active faculty interested in continuing education, professional development, and enrichment programs. Chancellor Folt said their insights have been valuable to the university.

Retired faculty have served on committees, produced a list for the Office of Faculty Governance and the RFA, and contributed to the work of the Friday Center. Professor Dobelstein said there is a wide array of activities that departments can promote to support the work of RFA.

The Friday Center undergoes a periodic review overseen by the Chancellor and the Provost, with Chancellor Folt. President Andy Dobelstein shared that UNC-CH is unique in these efforts and that the RFA is an untapped resource.

In October, Chancellor Folt inspired the Faculty Council at the council's Oct. 13 meeting to follow up to Meyer’s discussion. Stay tuned for details.

Three events for this spring:
- Our April general meeting. Items of note are election of new board members and committee appointments.
- Three events this spring: One event is a talk about Black History Month, another is a talk about the Friday Center, and the third is a talk about the Friday Center Richard Dobelstein's perspective on RFA.
- The Friday Center discussion focused less on faculty needs and more on ways to involve the community.

Lessons for us, then, are to be aware of this relationship.

The Friday Center discussion focused less on faculty needs and more on ways to involve the community. It is a place to explore, learn, and engage.

The Friday Center underwent a periodic review overseen by the Chancellor and the Provost, with Chancellor Folt. President Andy Dobelstein shared that UNC-CH is unique in these efforts and that the RFA is an untapped resource.

In October, Chancellor Folt inspired the Faculty Council at the council’s Oct. 13 meeting to follow up to Meyer’s discussion. Stay tuned for details.

Three events for this spring:
- Our April general meeting. Items of note are election of new board members and committee appointments.
- Three events this spring: One event is a talk about Black History Month, another is a talk about the Friday Center, and the third is a talk about the Friday Center Richard Dobelstein’s perspective on RFA.
- The Friday Center discussion focused less on faculty needs and more on ways to involve the community.

Lessons for us, then, are to be aware of this relationship.

Limitations include money, time, and energy, as well as staff. Reaching out to alumni and friends build on faculty experience.

Continuing activities:
- Our April general meeting. Items of note are election of new board members and committee appointments.
- The Friday Center underwent a periodic review overseen by the Chancellor and the Provost, with Chancellor Folt. President Andy Dobelstein shared that UNC-CH is unique in these efforts and that the RFA is an untapped resource.
- In October, Chancellor Folt inspired the Faculty Council at the council’s Oct. 13 meeting to follow up to Meyer’s discussion. Stay tuned for details.
- Three events for this spring: One event is a talk about Black History Month, another is a talk about the Friday Center, and the third is a talk about the Friday Center Richard Dobelstein’s perspective on RFA.
- The Friday Center discussion focused less on faculty needs and more on ways to involve the community.

Lessons for us, then, are to be aware of this relationship.

Limitations include money, time, and energy, as well as staff. Reaching out to alumni and friends build on faculty experience.

Continuing activities:
- Our April general meeting. Items of note are election of new board members and committee appointments.
- The Friday Center underwent a periodic review overseen by the Chancellor and the Provost, with Chancellor Folt. President Andy Dobelstein shared that UNC-CH is unique in these efforts and that the RFA is an untapped resource.
- In October, Chancellor Folt inspired the Faculty Council at the council’s Oct. 13 meeting to follow up to Meyer’s discussion. Stay tuned for details.
- Three events for this spring: One event is a talk about Black History Month, another is a talk about the Friday Center, and the third is a talk about the Friday Center Richard Dobelstein’s perspective on RFA.
- The Friday Center discussion focused less on faculty needs and more on ways to involve the community.

Lessons for us, then, are to be aware of this relationship.

Limitations include money, time, and energy, as well as staff. Reaching out to alumni and friends build on faculty experience.